Newest Phonograph Catches Overtones and Reproduces Essence of Melody.

Startlingly novel even in this age of mechanical marvels was the concert that drew 2,500 persons to Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. Alone on the vast stage there stood a nahogany phonograph, apparently exactly like the tamed and domesticated variety, that has become to be as much a part of the furniture of the ordinary drawing room as was the wheezy which the domestic phonographs have melodeon a generation ago. In the midst of the hushed silence a white-gloved man emerged from the mysterious region behind the draperies, solemnly placed a record in the gaping mouth of the machine, wound it up and vanished.

Then Mme. Rappold stepped forward. and leaning one arm affectionately on the phonograph began to sing an air It arrived before the bar of justice, from "Tosca." The phonograph also be-

Audience Guesses on Voices.

Occasionally the singer would stop and the phonograph carried on the air alone. When the mechanical voice ended Mme. Rappold sang. The fascination for the audience lay in guessing whether Mme. Rappold or the phonograph was at work, or whether they were singing together.

At the end of the song the singer bewed, patted her stiff-jointed mahograph friend on the back and left it to amuse the audience with a piano solo. Whether it is disrespectful to call Mme. Rappold's double a phonograph or not remains in dout. According to the press agent it is the latest triunph of Thomas A. Edison, perfected after four years' work. Exactly what is the distinction between the mahograph marvel on the Carnegie stage yesterday and the domestic variety of the strand of the strike is not too much to say it is threatened with a unanimous strike. The entire force of the Federal Creasete Company's plant at Constable Hook is going to walk out if shorter hours are not granted.

Leading the strike is James Connolly, the shipping clerk-engineer-freman-janitor of the plant. John Dogammerot, who watches the plant while the force is away, is his follower. Both of them have vowed to strike if each must work twelve hours out of the twenty-four. The Bayonne "plant" is a shipping effect for the size of the force.
